THE RENO PHIL REBUILDS SEASON 52 TO MEET GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES AND GET BACK IN THE CONCERT HALL

Reno, Nev. (June 12, 2020)-- The Reno Phil announced today that it will be rebuilding the performance schedule and artistic programming for the 2020-21 season to adhere to current government guidelines and protect the health of musicians and audiences.

The Reno Phil's 52nd season was initially unveiled in February of 2020, but after cancelling and postponing more than a dozen performances through August of 2020, the Board of Directors has made the decision to start recrafting the season from scratch in order to get back into the concert hall as soon as possible. The programming originally slated for 2020-21 will be moved in large part to the following year along with any tickets sold.

"The Reno Phil is committed to bringing exceptional musical experiences to Reno, Sparks, and all of northern Nevada," said Tim Young, Reno Phil President and CEO. "Our musicians, board and staff are making plans to do exactly that over the next year, in concerts that can be safely performed and enjoyed and with appropriately sized ensembles and audiences."

Unfortunately, social distancing and the symphony do not work together harmoniously. The Reno Phil is hopefully that concerts can resume sooner than anticipated, but is prepared to be flexible, without continually disappointing the orchestra and audiences with performance cancellation notices.

"Throughout the pandemic, we've experienced so much that is unknown and so much change. As we look towards next season, more than anything we want to offer wonderful musical experiences that we are sure we can deliver," said Laura Jackson, Reno Phil Music Director and Conductor. "There is so much incredible music that the Reno Phil can perform even in a socially distant environment—intimate gems for smaller ensembles. This is a unique opportunity to engage with this rich and varied repertoire and I am very much looking forward to it.”
